Colonel Synge has furnished to the Times an account of his captivity among the brigands of Thessaly. He had been absent from home for a month, and returned to his farm on Tuesday, February 17th, a portion of his baggage, including his rifle-cartridges, not having yet reached him. On the 19th the house was surrounded by brigands, and what followed is thus described by Colonel Synge: "On Thursday night, between 10 and 11 o'clock, sitting in my arm-chair, I was startled by shots rattling in at the windows and bows at the granary-door below. My house is a solid brick building, the ground floor forming the granary, which had no interior communication with the rest of the house. The front is occupied by a large veranda. I had nothing ready. My guns had been packed away when I went up country, and I had not got them out. There were no cartridges for my rifle. I broke open a gun-case, put a gun together, I broke open a gun-case, put a gun together, got out some cartridges, went up to the top of the house and opened fire with small shot

THE PLASHES OF THE RIPLES. They were all round, banging away, and the bullets smashing up everything. My Albanians, who occupy a house across the farm-yard, about 100 yards off, also opened farm-yard, about 100 yards off, also opened fire, but the brigands were all under cover. Getting through the granary door, they collected some planks and straw, and, setting fire to the heap, the house was soon full of smoke and untenable, and I had to give up. As they afterwards told me, they left the forest, situate about half a mile off, shortly after dark, sent two of the band in advance with meat, with which they silenced the watch-dogs, and then the remainder advanced to reconnoitre. First they looked after the Albanians. Going up into the veranda of their house they saw them through the window and took note of their arms. the window and took note of their arms. Leaving some of their band to hold them in check, they next proceeded to reconnoitre the house. First they contemplated making a ladder and assaulting from the veranda, but, fearing to expose themselves, they considered that setting fire to the building from the outside would entail less loss. After trying unsuccessfully they determined to burst in the granary door and set fire in-side. Two guns were told off to each window on that side of the bouse, with orders to keep up a constant fire. Four men were sent to the door, two with axes and two with rifles, and the signal was given.

the fire, and I was told to send word that if any troops were sent in pursuit I should be murdered. I was then marched off to wards Mount Olympus. The night was pitch dark, with sleet and snow. About an hour and a haif's journey south there is the river Vistritza (Haleaemon) to cross. Arrived at the ferry, Niko, with one companion, went to the ferry-hut, in which were three Albanians and a Christian boatman. One of the Albanians was an old friend of Niko's, and he counted on his passing him over the river without opporiend of Nike's, and he counted on his passing him over the river without opposition. Knocking at the door, he said:
"Don't you know me? I have come from Venea, and must pass over to-night." The Albanian said, "Walt until I blow up the fire a bit," and then opened the door. Whether Niko was not recognized, or whether, seeing he had only one man with him, the Albanians thought be would be an easy capture, I cannot say; but one of them—Niko's friend—calling upon bis companions to shut the door, drew a revolver panions to shut the door, drew a revolver trom under his pillow and fired three shots, wounding Niko's companion in the shoulder, but missing himself.

NIKO DREW HIS YATAGHAN

and cut down the man with the revolver, breaking his yataghan with a thrust which disabled the second Albanian. The third was shot by one of the band through the window, and, some of them rushing in, the boatman was also wounded, but was made to work the ferry across. The wounded become was brought down to the boatman was brought down to the boatman. Albanian was brought down to the boat, and though I begged bard for his life and effered to ransom him, be was shot, and I was told that were they not in a hurry be would have been tortured. Having crossed the river and the plain between it and the mountains, it was a steady ascent, the snow getting deeper and deeper. About dawn there was a halt among some rocks and the day passed there. At night, on again. Until late on the third night the unfortunate horses got nothing but some dry beech leaves to est and no water, as it was all frozen. After the fourth night they disappeared, and afterwards turned up at Cate-

After five nights' travelling

COLONEL SYNGE WAS TAKEN TO A CAVE, where he remained under the guard of Ni ko's brother and five of the band, a demand for a 'ransom of 15,000 liras, or about £13,500, having meanwhile been sent to Consul-General Blunt by the brigand chief. In this cave the Colonel was kept until the negotiations were completed.

sometimes bread without the goat, some-times goat without the bread-generally wine and coffee. Great caution was requisite in procuring supplies, as they teared lest their tracks in the snow should be followed. I knew that while negotiations were pending Consul-General Blunt would were pending Consul-General Blunt would were pending Consul-General Blunt would prevent troops being sent in pursuit, but the brigands were always suspicious. Once they got an idea that other brigands had been put on to capture Nike, with a view to exchanging him for me, and they were rather mad. They told me that had such an rather made, and had Nike lost his been put on to capture Niko, with a view to exchanging him for me, and they were rather mad. They told me that had such an attempt been made, and had Niko lost his life, they would have made me a jacket alla franca-i. e., removed the skin of the upper part of the body-and then

"I very well knew that such a scheme would only have been resorted to as a last resource, and assured them they were mis-taken. However, on the occasion I was die-tated another letter demanding 15,000 hras, gold watebes and chains, gold rings, amber eigar-hoiders, amber beads, Martini rifles and cartridges, revolvers and cartridges, resolvers and cartridges, resolvers and cartridges. these were not sent within five days my ears would be sent in, in eight days my nose, and in ten my head. On three occasions Mr. Blunt sent me some newspapers, always with a few cheery words cautiously scattered about among the printing. After a weary time in the cave—for it was bitterly cold, and in the day-time they rarely lit a fire unless the weather was foggy or snow was falling—I was told that all had been arranged. Taken out blindfolded, mounted on a mule, and sometimes riding, sometimes picking my own way, I was brought down to the vicinity of Caterina. I had to write a faird letter relative to the movement of the troops escorting the ransom, also saying that if there was any bad money among the ransom the amount would be doubled."

The manner in which for 2,000. I believe they gave out that he amount to mislead other bands of whom they were in dread. Mr. Blunt, toe, had keep wisely concealed the amount from everybody. It was generally understood that he had raised the 2,000 liras for me by mortgage, and so judiclously had he concealed the other 10,000 liras that Niko, who knew everything that went on in Salonica, sent word not to try to deceive him—he knew well that Mr. Blunt had only 2,000 ready; and it was necessary to get ready; and it was necessary to get to inspect the full sum to reassure him. Nor were these precautions unnecessary, for we afterwards learned that Davelli, another chief of a band numbering some thirty, had formed a project for carrying off the ransom, but was misinformed as to the day of payment. We being seated round in the forest, the bags of money were laid out, and three of the band inspected each coin to see that there were no marks which might give a clue to their wheresbouts afterwards. One bag was counted and the other weighed against it. They had withdrawn their demands for the other things mentioned in the letter except the watches and a Martini and revolver. A Martini rifle offered them was accepted, but the revolver was not good, and they preferred waiting for a new one. Satisfied with the ransom they shaved me and gave me a cup of water according to their customs, returned five liras they had borrowed from me in the cave, as also a revolver they had taken from me. It is unusual to release a captive before nightfall, but it was successfully arranged by Mr. Bizzo, and A SPY ranged by Mr. Bizzo, and

I WAS SET AT LIBERTY. When taken I had some thirty-odd liras in my pocket; of this sum they borrowed five for their expenses, but did not touch the rest. In a few minutes I was able perthe rest. In a few minutes I was able personally but very inadequately to thank Consulgeneral Blunt for his energetic action and able efforts, which had led to my release, to contribute to which he had left nothing unthought of or to chance. Had troops been allowed to pursue the brigands while I was in their hands, owing to the snow on the ground affording facilities for tracking, and the open state of the forest, the Fisk to me the open state of the forest, the risk to me would have been very great. Mr. Bizzo worked hard and at considerable personal risk, and I am greatly indebted to him. On his first interview with Niko, the opening words of the latter were, 'How many pairs of shoes I have worn out looking after you.' Nike had attacked a farm of Mr. Bizzo's last year, and had been pursued in consequence, so hore him a grudge."

Colonel Synge concludes his letter with the following account of the composition and character of the band by whom he was carried off: "THE BAND is under the leadership of Niko, assisted by his brother Basil and his brother-in-law Ka-lesh. Another brother, Georghi, is chief of a second band, numbering only eight. A third brother is in prison in Greece. Of Niko's band six are deserters from the Greek army. These, with Niko and his rela-

Clothed in white—a happy child at play.
Her face all radiant as the hues of morning—
Wi h farry step she trod;
A creature loyely as the flowers of May,
Who could be witch us with her childish scorning,
Or rule us with a nod.

Clothed in white—with blossoms in her hair,
A maiden whom to love appeared a duty—
A spell around her hung;
A sense of all that Nature makes most fair,
That filled with rapture all who watched beauty.
Or heard her silver tongue.

Clothed in white—she heard the wedding-chime.
Blushing beneath her crown of orange-flowers.
As her soft answer flows
Like music, with no prescience of the time
When o'er her life, which love so fondly dowers,
The shadowy grave will close.

Clothed in whit:—her form we seem to see
Shine in the glory of a new existence,
Defying time and night,
And from all earth-horn memories set free;
While we, like travellers tolling in the distance,
Yearn for the coming light.

he sold his pistol two years ago. But Jones got the next shave. The man who keeps the candy-shop at the corner says that boy must be a swift runner. He saw him talking to Jones in front of his establishment five minutes before he rushed into the hair-dresser's. But then a boy makes nothing of running three miles in five minutes when on an errand of mercy.—Boston Transcript.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF TWO PRAMED DWELLINGS ON THE EAST SIDE OF ELM STREET, AND A VACANT LOT ON THE NORTH SIDE OF POPLAR STREET. BOTH NEAR THE LOWER GAS-WOILS, ROCKETTS, BY AUCTION.—In execution of a decree of the Chancery Court of the city of Richmond entered on the 24th of April, 1880, in the suit of Temple vs. Warkins and ads., I will sell by public ancilou, upon the premises, respectively, on WEDNESDAY the 18th day of May, 1880, at 45 o'clock P. M., the TWO FRAMED DWELLINGS situated as above described, being between Rocketts street and the York River railroad. The lots on which they stand front together 98 feet 6 inches on Elm street, and ram back on their south fried 93 feet and on their north line 107 feet to an alley, upon which they front 153 feet. The bouses are: One a FRAME HOUSE with seven rooms and basement with three rooms, occupied by Francis Craven; the other a SMALL, FIRME, HUSE with five rooms, occupied by James W. Crow.

The VACANT LOT, which will be sold immediately after, fronts 57 feet on Ponlar street between Elm and Maple streets, and extends back on its east dine 255 feet 2rd on its west line 186 feet to the railroad, upon which it fronts about 48 feet.

This is very good properly, and should attract the attention of those wishing 16 buy in that section of the city. The property will be sold in parcels, as will be shown at the time of the sale.

TERMS: One third cash; and the balance at six, tweive, and eighteen months, for notes, with interest added, and the title retained by the Court intilial the notes are paid.

ROCKBRIDGE ALUM SPRINGS

FOR SALE.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Augusta county, Va., rendered at the November term, clienting the court of Augusta county, Va., rendered at the November term.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Augusta county, Va., rendered at the November term, 1879, in the case of Porter and wife vs. Frazier, &c., and two other suits, we will ofter for sale at public auction, on the premises, on SATURDAY 19th day of Jone, 1920, this CELEBRATED WATERING-PLACE.

For medicinal qualities, no waters in the "two Virginias" excel these. In accommodations and popular patronage the celebrated White Sulphur alone surcasses the Rockbridge Ahm. Seven hundred guests may be accommodated.

It is five miles south of Milboro' depct, on the Chesapeake and Ohio railway, in Rockbridge county, Va.

The TRACT contains about 1.000 ACRES.

It lies between North mountain and Mill mountain; and with its large and well-arranged HOTEL BUILDING and COTTAGE RANGES it constitutes a beautiful group in a lovely valley.

Apart from its value as a summer resort, the sales of the water and alum mass would alone justify an investment at a hand-some price.

TERMS of SALE: Ten per cent, in money; balance in five equal annual paymonts, to be secured by bonde, with approved surelies therein, bearing interest from date, and by retention of title as ultimate security.
